TWHE Conference Stipends: TWHE is pleased to offer up to five $500 conference stipends. The purpose of this stipend is to help a TWHE member with financial need attend the annual conference and to encourage ongoing interest and involvement with TWHE. An effort will be made to award stipends to participants from a variety of higher education institutions and geographic locations. These stipends are available through the generous contributions of conference sponsors and the responsible fiscal management of the TWHE Board since its founding in 2007. Women interested in receiving a stipend may contact Kristin Harper at kharpert@tamu.edu for additional information and to request an application form (the forms are also available on the conference webpage). Applicants are encouraged to contact Kristin by March 18.

Sara Laschever
Have you ever suffered from the ‘would-a, could-a, should-a’ blues? Fear no more--author Sara Laschever will look at why women are much less likely than men to use negotiation to improve their circumstances. Drawing on research from her two books (co-authored with Linda Babcock), “Women Don't Ask: The High Cost of Avoiding Negotiation--and Positive Strategies for Change” and “Ask For It: How Women Can Use the Power of Negotiation to Get What They Really Want,” Sara will illuminate the price women pay when they don’t negotiate on their own behalf and help conference participants overcome this costly reluctance.

Attendees will learn how to identify more opportunities to negotiate and receive tips on refining their goals, polishing their skills, and thoroughly preparing for every kind of negotiation, large or small. They’ll leave knowing how to negotiate anything effectively using strategies that are comfortable for women.

As an added bonus, conference attendees will receive a copy of “Ask For It” with their conference registration fee. No need to negotiate here!

Communication through technology continues to evolve, yet the rules are not clear on appropriate use and delivery. How strong is your common sense when it comes to appropriate use of telephones, email, texting and social media postings? What is TMI? Do all these people really benefit from being included in an email? Are all of you my friend? Join an experienced higher education technology-savvy professional in an exploration of communication methods, opportunities to making your message clear, and if the approaches are different for women. Also receive tips for setting an example on your campus of appropriate and efficient communication applications.

Concluding Session Discussion

Valerie Paton, Texas Tech University, 2012-13 ACE Fellow
Margaret Rice, University of Houston-Victoria

TWHE board members lead discussion on conference topics, set challenge questions, encourage continued networking. A key consideration of attending the TWHE conference is leadership development, and as the conference wraps-up, what goals are women considering to maintain the momentum generated at the conference? Develop institutional advancement skills? Participate in resume building? Join a community board? Network and pursue small group discussions? The options are endless—strategically narrowing them down is key.
